

To Sarah.

Oh! veil that flashing eye of thine!
I would be free,
Let it upon another shine:
But not on me!

There was an hour, there was an hour,
I could have borne its light,
Could have defied thy woman power,
But not to night!

There is a spell upon my soul,
And rises within my heart
Vague thoughts, the will cannot control
Or make depart!

For I should never think of thee:
Two words than vain,
Unless the hand and heart once free
Were so again!

Tens in his onward course
May break the spell,
May even hand from heart divorce:
Till then, farewell!

Memory will yield the past,
Though darkness lowers;
The present will not always last,
Horn may be ours!

Springtime may come again
With fragrant flowers,

Bonnie Lass's bright and glowing reign.
To dock her hours.
